Jackie and Kevin Milling are currently progressing with Sport Diver Training and the site is ideal for Rescue Training and Navigation Skills.

The gravel beach makes an ideal spot for landing the casualty

The warm sunny evening had also attracted pleasure divers in the form of Cathy and Patrick... They reported an excellent dive having spent 45 minutes in the water exploring all the underwater attractions – boats, cars, helicopters, and swim through pipes.

Yes, Patrick, you DO want to go diving!

Mike Mudryk who owns the site had kindly opened up for our group as a special favour allowing us a late night session on a Wednesday and we are grateful to him for this. Normally, the site is open daily from 10.00am until 6pm (summer) 5pm (winter). If everyone has packed up by 4pm they would probably close early. On Thursday evenings during the summer they do training and try dives so can be open until 9pm. There is no need to call unless your intention was to arrive fairly late, just to make sure they don't close up early, or to book kit / cylinders. For more information check the website or call on the number below. Entrance fee is £10.00 + £5.00 registration which last for 2 years.
